NavMonster.com Launches Comprehensive Pre-Flight Web Site for GA Pilots

Cedar Park, Texas (November 26, 2007) – General Aviation pilots finally have a complete solution for pre-flight planning.

NavMonster.com fills a much needed gap in the Internet's current offerings of pre-flight web sites. By pulling together all of the most commonly used information, NavMonster relieves the pilot of having to visit multiple sites to get information on weather, fuel prices, FBOs, etc...

NavMonster.com offers maps, charts, decoded weather, FBO information, fuel prices, winds aloft, and much more in an extremely easy-to-use and uncluttered interface. Best of all, NavMonster.com is 100% free to everyone, and doesn't even require annoying registrations.

"We saw so many sites that were either hard to use, didn't have all the info we needed, or just cost too much money," says Marc Alexander, NavMonster CTO, co-founder, and pilot. "We took the best of what was out there, put it into one place, and made it free."

NavMonster works with all modern browsers such as Internet Explorer 6+, Mozilla Firefox 2+, and Safari. To get started, visit <http://www.navmonster.com> today.
